MR. McEWEN'S ADDRESS.

The address of our fellow-townsman, John A. deserved praise. The Memphis Eagle and Enquirer speaks of it as follows:

"THE MYSTERY OF LIFE."-We have received and read with a great degree of interest, an address re-Union University, at Murfreesborough, Tennessee, on the above subject, by John A. McEwen, Esq., of Nashvilla

This address is interspersed with passages of rare beauty-of striking philosophy and of classic richness; and is one of the most chaste, finished, and beautifully written productions that we have for some time read; and it fully sustains the reputation of the author as an erudite and polished scholar, and an able and gifted writer. This production is the ripe fruit that has not matured in a day, but required the genial influence of daily suns and nightly dews for many seasons—not that the address has been the study of years, or that its framework might not have been the work of a day; but, that the living soil, making all vital, harmonious and full of sweet cadence, was the life of thought that gathered its wisdom and its strength from the experience of many days. Mr. McEwen is one of the first bellelettres scholars in the State; a graceful and elegant writer, and a lawyer who stands in the front rank of his profession. He is a profound and original thinker, and possessing a vast store of information on almost all literary, scientific and general topics; with a mind minute in the details and comprehensive in its grasp of subject, he takes hold of it, investigates it fully, illustrates it with the rich gems of classical and historical incidents, which are so perfectly at his command-embellishes it with the graces of rhetoric, and strengthens it with the power and weight of the logical deductions so forcibly drawn and hapily applied.

A correspondent of our own, who is eminently qualified to speak, sends us the following notice of this address:

[For the Union and American.] THE MYSTERY OF LIFE: Au address before the Literary Societies of Union University, by John A. Mc-

We cannot express the satisfaction the spirit of this address has given us. Mr. McEwey's addresses always reveal rich, deep and noble thought, sustained by a force and beauty of illustration, and earnest and manly eloquence. He seems ever to aim at awakening the reason, moving the conscience, and waking up the slumbering energies of the soul so that it may feel its natural want of religion on the blessed reality of its being and know all its harmonious responsibilities. No man of elevated mind can rise from the perasal of the above address without feeling his rational faith strengthened, his charity enlarged, and his courage energised and enobled to meet life's conflicts bravely and hopefully.

But while sincerely recording our appreciation we can but feel that such a mind as that of the orator must soon see the day, if it has not already seen it, when much of the poetry of the world will cloy upon it, and its philosophy burden it. The point of his status overlooks a wider field than the ordinary debates of the forum or the polished orations of Academie. We need not tell him that it is the high noon of the nineteenth century, and as it declines, the redolent glories of its upper clouds already gleam forth the coming of a brighter day for humanity, betokening the union of nations and communities as they have never united before, and the vision of that day will not be satisfied with anything less than a universal brotherhood. This vision will brighten many a "mystery," and even the dark cloud of war shall melt before its increasing light. The day assuredly comes, however slowly it moves over the dark ways of human selfishness and tyranny, and it will be proclaimed from on high whenever there is sufficient warmth and vitality to sustain the souls that already bravely herald it. - | Miss J E Sands, Lavergoe; J J Docker, Human understandings will be awakened to the real influences that have laid waste the highest asparations of man. NASHVILLE RACES-WALNUT COURSE. The high reputation as racers of the horses entered yesterday, together with the fact that the day was remarkably pleasant, drew an immense crowd to the course. And well were they paid for their trouble, for a more interesting race none need desire to see.

Martha Dunn was the favorite at two to one, and Cordelia Reed had the call over the Kentucky At the usual hour (half after twelve o'clock) the horses made their appearance upon the course where they were soon put in readiness for the contest. The betting now became very animated-scarcely a proposition was made but what was taken. It seemed that the friends of the various horses had the utmost confidence. For our part the previous day's report prepared us to listenwith patience to the warnings of prudence-perhaps the better plan. after all.

FIRST HEAT. At the proper signal Cornelia Reed and Martha Dunn went off together at a good, steady lick which was kept up without any abatement for a mile and a half; the latter then showed a little in front, a position she kept to the stand. a good house. We have no time for comment at Yet so closely was she pressed by the former that the late hour at which we write; farther than to the result was enveloped in doubt to the close. In say, that Mr. Greene's company is much better this heat Cravace took no particular interest, seemingly, more than to prevent the flags falling when she was the wrong side of the score.

The usual time being allowed for cooling off, the horses again made their appearance at the stand, To-night, we have the play of Love's Sacrifice exhibiting as great a desire to get off, and as much and the farce, "To Oblige Benton." But all cently delivered before the literary societies of we shall stop now to say is, that no one should go to the Course without testing his ability. Now > for the race. SECOND HEAT. Cravace took the lead, followed closely by Cordelia Reed, So tremendous was the pace required for the former to keep her position. that the first mile was made in 1:50.

The long-odds-men now really began to grow alarmed. But Martha, it appears, had not been at work, for immediately on entering the second mile she made a brush and went by with apparent ease, nor did she again loose her position to the end of the race. But the struggle was awful, from here out, between the other two. And although Cardelia was beaten, she acquitted herself in a race horse

It is due to Cravace to say that she carried about ten pounds over weight. This originated in the fact that her owner was not certain of her age .--It was his own decision that compelled him to carry the weight alluded to.

So well was this race contested in every mile, in every heat, and on every part of the ground, that we show little want of judgment in pronouncing it one of the most interesting races that has ever come off upon the Walnut Course; and though the result left many present minus a little cash, all seemed to enjoy the sport.
